“ I hope my story can be the last, and certainly hope this devastating story doesn't go to waste, and all of the pain and suffering my family and I have endured can go into passing a new Bill to protect all of the honorable veterans in our country!”

 Brian Tally, a former SGT in the United States Marine Corps was severely injured due to the incompetence of several doctors and ER staff, at the VA hospital in Loma Linda, Ca. His misdiagnosis led to months of neglect and malpractice, that eventually nearly cost him his life. After nearly a year long battle with the VA's General Counsel attorneys, Brian was denied compensation for his injuries, because the VA had concluded the accused physician was not a VA employee, but an "independent contractor" working within the VA. The VA also concluded that it's not responsible, or accountable for the injuries and malpractice due to the current FTCA law / Contractor Exception. Brian is now on a mission to change the law to protect all veterans from unidentified "independent contractors," and to ensure that VA is transparent and fully accountable.

Know who is caring for you. What is their employment status? Are your VA doctors, nurses, technicians and other personnel “VA employees” or “independent contractors”? Veterans are being denied malpractice/negligence claims due to this “technicality.”

The Federal Tort Claims Act (FTCA), established in 1946, is the legal mechanism for compensating people who have suffered personal injury due to the negligent or wrongful actions of employees of the U.S. government. This 72 year old law is due for reform now more than ever. In 2018 VA hired more independent contractors than ever before and that number is expected to climb each coming year due to budget and liability concerns.

Malpractice and/or negligence that causes permanent injury doesn't happen very often, but when it does, it can be catastrophic to one's life, especially if the affected veteran doesn't know the employment status of the provider he/she is seeing. Knowing how and where to file a malpractice claim is extremely important.

Who holds “independent contractors” accountable for their actions inside of a VA hospital or VA clinic?
